He was educated in the Lehi schools and later attended the Utah State Agricultural College.

He married Clara L. Rothe, March 20, 1901, in the Salt Lake Temple.

After he was married and had two children he was called to the Northern States Mission in 1903 and released in 1905.

He filled many positions of responsibility in the Church, working as a Sunday School teacher for many years, also as Superintendent of the Sunday School in the Lehi Second Ward.

He then moved to the First Ward where he became President of the Mutual Improvement Association, then was called as a home missionary.

He was one of the seven presidents of the 127th Quorum of Seventy for many years and was later ordained a High Priest.

He sang in the choir and choral groups for over thirty years.

In civic affairs he served as a director of the Lehi Irrigation Company and served as president for thirteen years.

He bought the property joining his father and worked on the farm as long as his father lived. He then moved to the farm southwest of Lehi and engaged in farming.

He exhibited his animals in county and state fairs, and did much to improve the quality of dairy cattle in this community.

He died suddenly at his home on Friday, January 27, 1933.
